Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, United States, 2015. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Intent of Research: This paper examines current and future requirements for strategic leadership of the United States Army and identifies Special Operations Forces senior leaders as potential strategic leaders of the Army based upon the alignment their professional attributes and competencies with the future operating environment and the probability of continued irregular and hybrid conflict. First this paper assesses the concept of strategic leadership within the framework of recent historical and future global conditions. Next, an analysis of U.S. Army strategic leaders identifies commonalities of educational, professional development and promotion opportunities. A comparison of U.S. Special Operations Command (USSOCOM) practices for identification, development and assignment of high potential officers reveals some deviation. Finally, options are recommended for enhancing the strategic leadership of the Army and increasing the potential for future success in volatile and complex situations by including Special Operations officers.
