The patient must have his temper and passions under the most perfect control. Much medicine is, as a rule, unnecessary until the hypertrophy ceases to compensate for the existing trouble. Then the time for medication has arrived. First, the constitution must be attended to and the feruginous preparations are indicated in a large majority of cases. The tincture of the chloride of iron serves the purpose admirably although my favorite prescription is the combination of iron, quinine and strychnine, either in the form of the elixir or capsule. The treatment directed to the heart itself may now be considered, and medicines for the relief of cardiac pain, regulation of the movement of the heart, stimulating or quieting the heart s action...
