Excerpt: .prisoner was sentenced to life imprisonment on the charge of the murder of two young men who were found dead in a Brooklyn hotel. They were asphyxiated and robbed. The police arrested Boehman, charging him with the crime. Boehman swore that he was in a music hall the night of the crime, and that he had trouble there with a bouncer named Schmidt. The proprietor of the place, Sol. S. Weinthal, also knew that Boehman was in the place, but these two important witnesses would not come forward to testify, so Boehman was convicted and sent up for life. In prison Boehman met a physician who heard his story and promised to aid him. After a long search Weinthal and Schmidt were found and they finally made affidavits proving the innocence of Boehman. They said they feared the police power against them if they...
