When you lose a loved one, there's not a lot you can do except wait for time to heal the open wound. But when 13-year-old Theo Saunders' mother is struck down by a drunk driver, his reeling family does something wholly unexpected: they seek distraction and solace in a trip to far-flung China. In the aftermath of his mother's death, Theo is struggling to understand how, somewhere, somebody decided that when you turn thirteen, you suddenly become an adult. Like all adolescents, he's feeling betrayed. The years of parental reassurance that they'll keep the world a safe place have ended all too abruptly. He knows this isn't new. As if finding out who you are amidst the jigsaw puzzle of high school, social media and an ignorant, extorting bully all coupled with the sirens call of the opposite sex isn't enough, Theo and his twin sister Rose awake to find themselves drowning in a sea of grief. Smart and independent the children of two Seattle Symphony principal players in their family, Art is always spelled with a capital A. The twins have been raised in a home alive with music, encouragement and warm humor. They've been taught to think for themselves and believe that any goal is attainable. Clifford and Katharine Saunders balanced each other in perfect counterpoint, enjoying a marriage sparked by love at first sight and grounded by their shared passion for music. Clifford is now astonishingly alone, and for the first time in his life, unsure of what to do. For Theo and Rose, it's as if they've lost both of their parents. To further complicate an impossible situation, heavy commitments that will further his reputation...
