Excerpt from Family Support Act of 1988: Hearing Before the Subcommittee on Human Resources of the Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, One Hundred Third Congress, Second Session, March 15, 1994 The Family Support Act of 1988 also established a new education, training, and employment program, called the Job Opportunities and Basic Skills Training (jobs) program. The program provides States flexibility within Federal guidelines to help needy families with children reduce the degree to which they depend on afdc for income and avoid long-term enrollment in the afdc program. State jobs programs must provide a broad range of services, including education, job training, and job readiness activities. Programs also must include at least two out of the following four activities job search, community work experience (work in exchange for welfare), grant diversion (welfare used to provide and subsidize a job), or oh-the-job-training. Under the jobs program, States are required to achieve certain rates of participation among afdc families. Some afdc parents, mainly the ill or disabled and those caring for young children, are exempt from participation, but may volunteer. States must require the nonexempt to participate, to the extent resources are available. In general, Federal funding for jobs program costs is available as a capped entitlement. The entitlement level equals billion for fiscal year 1994 In order to access Federal funds, States are required to match Federal spending at a rate that varies by State, but generally is no more than 40 percent. Federal matching is reduced if a State fails to target 55 percent of funds on specified priority populations families in which the parent is under age or if the State fails to meet participation standards. At the hearing,...
