Is it not so? Yes, in this August, 1885, travelling with Cook s tickets, we are Pilgrims, such as the spiritual condition of the West in the nineteenth century permits - Pilgrims who have got to our place of pilgrimage. Ceremony we have little. We don t even do as the pilgrim, once described to me - I dare say it is a common case - who, on nearing the hilltop whence some sacred city - I think it was Jeru salem - was first to appear in view, halted, put off the rags he had worn on the march, and put on shining clothes. But we are here and we may have grateful hearts. Let me dwell on this thought of Pilgrimage, since it is a type of so much else, especially because it holds forth the union of Religion and joy, which belongs to my subject, and which I would especially make my subject.
