That old, old house near the lane, Still shows the broken window pane, Where an urchin of long ago, Was wont to try his arrow bow. The dismal house is vacant now, For all the folks with ancient brow, Have passed away to other climes, And left the place to modern times. 4. 4. 4. ASLEEP Canst thou tell us, little sleeper, Whiter than the snow, Of the glory that surrounds thee We would know. Tell us of the holy city, With its streets of gold, Where his lambs the shepherd gather In the fold. For the gates seem widely open Where thou dwellest now, And we see the pure light shining On thy brow. Fare thee well, dear little sleeper, Hear our last good-night; Thou hast conquered in the battle; We must fight. May we live, that, when the summons Comes for us to die, We may meet thee in the cloud land, Bye and by. 4 A HUNDRED YEARS AGO Have you seen the old, old houses Of a hundred years ago Where floors had never a carpet, But were clean and white as snow. Where the windows, small and narrow, Framed no beauty, only when Cherub faces dimpled through them--Little women, little men. Have you seen the old, old settees Standing by the chimney side, So broad and deep, hard and whittled, Where the carvers skill was tried; Crossed with letters queer and mystic--Ps and Ms and clumsy Rs, Grandpas black...
