CHAPTER IV New Resolves. --With the departure of Warren Hastings, it was determined to do better. The conscience of the country was touched. But, as Mr. Ludlow points out in British India, we were not ready to give back to the Mogul Emperor the provinces we had agreed to keep for him, but which we had sold; we were not ready to give the Rohillas their independence, nor to return to the Subahdar the provinces which we had fleeced from him; nor to restore to the Begums their treasure, nor to give back Benares to its Rajah. How shamefully late British action came, can be understood from a letter written by the Court of Directors to Clive: We have the strongest sense of the deplorable state to which our affairs were on the point of being reached, from the corruption and rapacity of our servants,...
