Times change and we change with them, and such change is no disgrace provided it consists in progress toward truth. That during these four years modifications of views have come about, supposed facts have been shown to be deceptive, new truths have come to light and broader conceptions of matters bacteriological have developed, goes without saying. It may, therefore, not be out of place for me to review some of the statements contained in former reports, that we may see how far modifications are necessary to adopt these statements to present knowledge, and how much nearer we have come to established truth. As we proceed in this review it will become evident that in some directions there has been a simplification which is to be expected as the field clears and we come nearer to the great and fundamental truths. In other directions progress has served but to show into what an immense field we have entered. In some directions final truth has been reached or is near at hand; in others it is evidently as yet afar off. But the prospect is inviting, progress brings a constant succession of fulfilled expectations, equally unexpected disappointments, startling surprises, suddenly opening avenues for the advance, and that the final results will be great and good no one can doubt. Turning now to the first paper upon problems of bacteriology; we are still confronted by the difficulty in making satisfactory inoculation tests in several of...
