Excerpt from Rural Resorts and Summer Retreats: Along the Line of the Cumberland Valley Railroad, Including Picnic Parks and Pleasure Places Peeping from these slopes of velvet green and silvered border are the homes of farmers, and, like pictures, rise before the vision towns and villages whose spires and bell towers mark equi-distant points in a line of beauty stretching from where a silver gleam of waters marks the presence of the Susquehanna to a point where the whole is lost in the dimness of that hazy distance in which the parallel lines of mountain seem to meet and blend their blueness. And the glimmering track of the Cumberland Valley Railroad, like the great artery as it is of the busy life with which this scene is instinct, winds in gentle curve from village to village, and town to town, in the original line of civilization, marked first by the Indian moccasin, followed by the pack horse hoof and wagon track opening up this beautiful valley to the outside world, inviting the care-worn and heat-wearied denizen of the city to a delightful...
