Excerpt from An Essay on Elocution: Designed for the Use of Schools and Private Learners But retool-books, more especially, as they fall into the hands of children and youth - of such as peculiarly need lights to guide them, and encouragements to excite them, when defective or erroneous, are more pernicious than any others; for the prove either false guides, which end their readers astray, or no guides, which leave them in darkness. Hence, such books are worse than no books. What, then, is to be done, in order to avert the evil influence of bad books - an evil which has been rapidly increasing ever since Cadmus had the kindness to invent letters if this evil cannot be remedied, surely it may be easily retarded in its progress. Let parents, and guardians, and public functionaries, at once set themselves at work to elevate the profession of school-keeping to the rank and dignity of the other, less important, learned professions, by increasing the salaries of instructors, so much as to enlist in this noble calling, none but men of genuine talents and truly liberal acquirements, and, not only will bad books soon hide their diminished heads, but the youth of our country will receive twice as good an education as they now do, at a less expense, because, in a far shorter time.
