Not illustrated. 1879 Excerpt: . . . in Britain, and this ship represents the result of his experience in building and sailing four of a similar kind. Depend upon it, there is plenty in this ship worth studying. I am old enough to remember the old Kent, of about 1,000 tons, which in her day, now some twenty-five years ago, was a very crack ship, and used to run against the Marco Polo. The master of the Kent, George Gibbs, an old schoolmate at the Royal Academy, on his return from his first voyage, wrote me as follows--the letter is before me: --We were 51d. 2h. to Cape Otway outwards. I had never had a fair days run; the best was 293 knots. Homewards, round the Horn, 58d. 3h. , including 27 hours in St. Vincent. The ship is perfect in every respect. Perhaps I am speaking rather strongly when I say this, but I found nothing during the voyage (round the world) that I could wish altered. The engines worked admirably. This is rather different to the Tourmalines voyage to the Cape. The Kent has just returned from her third voyage, homewards via canal, 49 days dock to dock, and goes out again next month (May). She sailed from Plymouth on her first voyage, 25th October, 1876. There is not in the whole Navy List one cruiser that is fit to be named in the same day as the Kent. P. S. --May, 1878. Gibbs tells me, on his last voyage...
