Virginia Potato Exchange, with a complete history of which exchange the editor is quite familiar. Our members would do well to look up the article and read it, as it is but a forecast of what success we expect to attain under sane management and consistent cooperation. LOOKING AHEAD TO GREATER PROFITS The element of time has always been vitally important in co-operative producing and selling organizations such as the California Honey Producers Cooperative Exchange. It has been found that if the members will stick together in season and out of season, through bad years and good years, success in the end will crown their loyalty. This has been proved many times. The preeminent examples are the California Fruit Growers Exchange (Sunkist) and the California Associated Raisin Company (SunMaid raisins). Members have had lean years and fat years in both these organizations. But in each the members, looking back a few years, see quite plainly that they have profited better than the nonmembers. Men of experience in cooperative marketing believe that the honey exchange will in time assure tremendous benefits for its members. The time will come, for instance, when the exchange will be able to put out great quantities of honey in small tumblers or glass jars. These jars will bear the trade-marked name and design of the honey exchange. The labels on the jars will tell the buyer that the contents of the jar are guaranteed to be genuine California honey. The name...
