Haugen, of Wisconsin, in the House of Representatives, May 12, 1888 History records no such supreme insight into affairs not palpable or apparent to the citizen or legislator since the days of Good Queen Bess until the reign of Grover the First. But the alarm seems to have faded away as gently as the last echoes of the Presidential message. While his fellow-partisans took up its sad refrain and carried it to every nook and corner of the land, the people of the United States, confident in the strength and stability of their institutions, refused to be convulsed. The public mind and business confidence are certainly as composed as at the date of the message. As a prophet of evil the President is a failure. Even this Democratic House betrays by its masterly inactivity its failure to appreciate the warning signal of impending danger, for, although the alarm note was sounded in early December, no remedy is proposed by the Democratic Committee on Ways and Means, the only source from which it could originate, before the middle of April. Suspicion might suggest that Democracy fears to meet the issue recklessly precipitated upon it by the President without first hearing from its nominating convention in June, and that the interval has been purposely bridged over by inaction. The next few weeks will disclose whether this is well founded. The bill before us, Democrats say, is intended to meet the danger of an accumulated surplus in the Treasury. I believe as firmly as any Democrat that no more revenue should be collected than necessary to meet the expenses of the Government economically administered. But parsimony...
