Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Some Observations on the Status of Cuba The status of Cuba since the ratification of the Treaty of Paris is anomalous, and viewed as a whole it might be called unique, could this distinction be safely applied to any political condition. I venture some observations upon several features of the situation, in the hope of making a contribution toward a right understanding of the position of Cuba and the responsibilities of the United States in its regard. The first paragraph of Article First of the Treaty of Paris reads: Spain relinquishes all claim of sovereignty over and title to Cuba. Here is a parting with territory by Spain, yet there is no cession, nor even a surrender in the sense of a transfer. At the end of the peace negotiations Spain did what, at their commencement, she protested could not be done - she abandoned Cuba, after vainly striving to induce the United States to accept it from her hands. But the island, though abandoned, did not become a derelict, being straightway occupied, although not annexed, by the United States. In these circumstances Cuba remains as foreign, to our domestic system as it was when under the dominion of Spain. It is not within the purview of the Constitution nor any law of the United States. It is not within the jurisdiction of Congress, which is the legislature of the United States and not of any other country. This limitation of congressional power is prescribed by the rule that the acts of a legislature have no force in foreign territory, except, of course, as they may be held to affect citizens abroad. This rule is...
