Among the physical conditions referred to above may be included strength of draft, depth of fuel bod, form of furnace, and the various methods of firing employed. So far as the generation of steam is concerned, combustion may be considered as the chemical union of oxygen with the various elements of the fuel for which it has an affinity. This union produces a definite amount of heat per pound of combustible, depending upon the clement with which the oxygen combines. The elements contained in the usual forms of fuel, which enter into the process of combustion, are oxygen, carbon, hydrogen and sulphur. There are various other constituents present which have no fuel value, such as the Iron, silicon, etc., found in coal. These usually exist in small quantities, and are classed as impurities. They produce a certain waste in the form of ash, and in addition to this, their temperature must be raised to that of the fire before becoming separated from the other elements, and more or less of this heat Is lost as they are discharged from the fire. Oxygen is the universal element of combustion; it is an invisible gas and makes up about one-fifth the volume of the air in an uncombined state. It is also found in water, being combined with hydrogen in this case, and in coal and other fuels of vegetable origin, combined with carbon and hydrogen. It is usually...
