Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Western Field, Vol. 5: August 1904 January 1905 It matters not whether Dame Nature bears on her visage the smile of calm contentment or the dark sullen frown of anger; her various moods are never misinterpreted. Each is pregnant with memories of sport enjoyed along this blessed shore under the varying conditions of calm or storm. The howling winds and driving rains of a sou easter recall happy hours spent on the duck pass when the dark lowering clouds scud by, driven by the lash of old Boreas. Clothed in. A slicker, hip boots and a hooded rubber cap, the storm has no terrors; and the roar of the waves as they dash to spray is a pleasant sound to the wildfowler. The corks of storm - driven ducks laboriously beating their way against the gale and half-hidden in the mist, the crouching figures of the gunners, the faint ashes of the guns with their accompanying roar deadened by the fierce blasts, and the falling birds are vividly recalled as one's thoughts revert to tight shooting in the storm.
