Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Charpy Machine Verification: Limits and Uncertainty All individual specimens from a batch of srms are assumed to follow the same distribution of absorbed energies. Thus, data from verification specimens tested on machines being verified by customers should follow the same basic distribution as data from the same batch of verification specimens tested on the three reference machines at nist. This is a fundamental assumption that is supported by the data shown in Figure 1. Here, the distribution of individual data points from three nist reference machines tested for the certification of a batch of srms is compared to the distribution of individual data points from customer machines testing the srms in verification tests. The distributions in Figure 1 demonstrate that the customer and nist distributions are quite similar; although the customer distribution has slightly larger spread than the nist distribution. The larger spread in the customer data is probably due to the fact that there are more machines included in the histogram of customer data. However, the comparison indicates that specimens sent to customers for verification tests are representative of the batch, and that customer measurements are similar to nist measurements.
