Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Dedicatory and Opening Ceremonies of the World s Columbian Exposition: Historical and Descriptive as Authorized by Board of Control To the student of the world s progress, no question is more interesting than the efforts of one race, or one nation to avail itself of the advancement made by other countries in art, science and invention. The artisan, the mechanic or the artist, who has the opportunity to study by personal inspection the works of other lands, can gain valuable knowledge. The statesmen of Europe in the seventeenth century first made a study of this great problem, and laid the foundation for the National and International Expositions, which culminated in the World s Columbian Exposition of 1893. During the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, the countries of Europe were wont to send abroad their most eminent scholars, artists and mechanics, to study the secrets of manufacture and art held by other nations. International brotherhood had not yet been placed on that broad plane which makes it the highest pleasure to impart knowledge to others. It was not until the emigration of the Huguenots, that many of the industrial secrets of France were imparted to the world. So jealously were secrets of manufacture guarded, that Peter the Great, of Russia, labored in disguise as a common workman in a Dutch shipyard, to learn the art of shipbuilding. Each nation locked within its breast the skill of its artificers, and each family and community kept behind barred doors the special secrets of its trade. But gradually, liberality of mind brought about a change, and finally tore away the bolts and bars from the factory and the workshop. The artist, the tradesman and the...
