Excerpt from Education a Monthly Magazine Devoted to the Science, Art, Philosophy and Literature of Education, 1916, Vol. 36 Let me preface my remarks on this subject by a few general statements. In the first place, let me say, that a great deal more depends upon the teacher than upon the method. A real teacher can follow even the antiquated grammar-translation method of teaching a modern language and hold the respect and interest of his pupils, and the pupils will think they are doing fine work, provided they have had no experience of the direct method as employed by a live teacher who is equipped with the necessary command of the foreign idiom and really knows what the direct method is and can put it into practice. It is hardly necessary to remind one that the direct method is the real gold of today, but there are many spurious coins in circulation. Publishers know the value of the term on a title page, for advertisement purposes, but I trust we are not so unsophisticated as to consider every advertisement inspired.
