SPECIALIZED GRAZING SYSTEMS: THEIR PLACE IN RANGE MANAGEMENT (CLASSIC REPRINT) (PAPERBACK)

Forgotten Books, United States, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . This book usually ship within 10-15 business days and we will endeavor to dispatch orders quicker than this where possible. Brand New Book. Excerpt from Specialized Grazing Systems: Their Place in Range Management The design and operation of a grazing system must be economically feasible because the ultimate purpose is to manage the range resources more profitably. Experience has shown that ranchers are reluctant to adopt new practices that require even minimal initial investments, and cost is often used as an excuse for not changing current methods. Most systems require investments in fencing and water development. News of system failures spreads more widely and rapidly than news of system successes. In only a very few studies (obviously the more successful ones) have cost-benefit analyses been made. Care must be exercised in using economic analysis to justify systems that cost a lot at first and are very slow in. Increasing production per animal, improving range condition, and permitting increased stocking rates. Yet one success leads to another, and ranchers are expanding their use of specialized systems.conditions may lead to disaster. Most currently recom mended systems include a certain amount of inherent flexibility, but problems arise when rotations are held rigidly to calendar dates and are not based on the needs of the livestock and vegetation. Systems under research test are more rigid than those on ranches, which may account for numerous unfavorable experimental results. Mostert and Donaldson (1959) believe that farmers in South Africa have not widely accepted some grazing systems because they have difficulty in interpreting and following the specifications. Numerous other benefits are attributed occasionally to specialized grazing systems. They are said to improve distribution of animals, to prevent selective grazing, to foster closer supervision of livestock, and...
