Excerpt from Life of Charles Dickens He was but two years old when his father left Portsea for London, and but four when a second migration took the family to Chatham. Here we catch our first glimpse of him, in his own word - painting, as a very queer small boy, a small boy who was sickly and delicate, and could take but little part in the rougher sports of his school companions, but read much, as sickly boys will - read the novels of the older novelists in a blessed little a kind of palace of enchantment, where roderick Random, Peregrine Pickle, humphrey Clinker, Tom Jones, the Vicar of Wakefield, don Quixote, Gil Blas, and robinson Crusoe, came out, a glorious host, to keep him company. And the queer small boy had read Shakespeare s Henry IV., too, and knew all about Falstaff s robbery of the travellers at Gad s Hill, on the rising ground between Rochester and Gravesend, and all about mad Prince Henry s pranks 5 and, what was more, he had determined that when he came to be a man, and had made his way in the world, he should own the house called Gad s Hill Place, with the old associations of its site, and its pleasant outlook over Rochester and over the low-lying levels by the Thames. Was that a child s dream? The man s tenacity and steadfast strength of purpose turned it into fact. The house became the home of his later life. It was there that he died.
