Paintings by Kaite Schmid From the preface: From the earliest days of the Church, Christians have repeated the account of Jesus passion, death, and resurrection. Many desired to see first-hand the sites in Jerusalem where Jesus spent the last hours before his crucifixion. Such a pilgrimage on the Way of the Cross (in Latin, the Via Crucis) made the familiar stories more tangible and personal. As Christianity spread further throughout the world, many were unable to visit the holy sites, yet the desire to somehow replicate this devotional experience continued. This gave rise to what are commonly known as the Stations of the Cross, a series of...
