On the other hand, most if not all of our mutton breeds are like the Jersey cattle, particularly useful in one line only. Until they can maintain their quality and excellence in this country and climate without introducing imported blood every few years it will be useless to attempt to place the mutton breeds on an equality with the fine wools, with their wonderful adaptability, vigor and hardiness. While in one sense the tendency to monopolize the sheep feeding business by a few is not to be altogether commended, yet in another it is. The man who buys up all his neighbors lambs and then buys his neighbors feed to fatten them with is surely on the high road to prosperity. If the time comes in a little while that sheep feeding no longer pays, the feeder has built up the fertility of his farm by feeding upon it all he and his neighbors grew, and will then be ready to make money by other systems of farming, as he did feeding sheep. This, of course, is not for the best interests of his neighbors, but the feeder is not to be censured therefor. The man who sells his lambs for some one else to feed and then sells the feed to feed them is of that class that cannot be taught anything anyway. He simply belongs to the great army of those of limited capacities who make of themselves stepping stones for the...
