Source: Responses to question 11, GAO survey The services plans for funding RPM could result in the further Insufficient RPM Funding deterioration of infrastructure and an increase in backlogs of repairs. The Defense Planning Guidances since 1997 were intended, in part, to get the services to increase spending in areas considered as underfunded. The April 1999 guidance update for fiscal years 2001 - 2005 requires that RPM funding at least match the annual levels in the fiscal year 2000 Presidents budget Future Years Defense Program while eliminating a previously established goal to meet 75 percent of RPM requirements. However, even if the service headquarters comply with the update, they do not plan to fund RPM at levels that will meet identified RPM requirements (both critical and noncritical). Furthermore, many bases and commands do not request funding to meet all their...
