Brand New Book  Print on Demand .A GLIMPSE AT THE PAST Two wild turkeys and seven rabbits. Not such a bad haul after all, Henry. That is true, Dave. But somehow I wanted to get a deer if I could. Oh, I reckon almost any hunter would like to bring down a deer, went on Dave Morris. But they are not so plentiful as they were before the war. That is true. Henry Morris placed the last rabbit he had brought down in his game-bag. I can remember the time when the deer would come up to within a hundred yards of the house. But you have got to take a long tramp to find one now. And yet game ought to be plentiful, went on his younger cousin. There wasn't much hunting in this vicinity during the war. Nearly everybody who could go to the front went. There were plenty who couldn't be hired to go, you know that as well as I do. Some were afraid they wouldn't get their pay and others were afraid the French or the Indians would knock em over. Henry Morris took a deep breath. Beats me how they could stay home-with the enemy doing their best to wipe us out. I can't understand it either. But now the war is over, do you think we'll have any more trouble with the Indians? continued Dave Morris, as he and his cousin started forward through the deep snow that lay in the woods which had been their hunting ground for the best part of the day.
