We hailed their thorny disks as harbingers of the warm south; but alas! the wind rose, the sun obscured itself, the blue sea paled; and when, in the very teeth of Scylla and Charybdis, our grimy train crawled aboard a modern ferry-boat for its unmomentous passage of those mythic perils, Sicily opened out before us gray and cold. At three o'clock in the afternoon of our third day we alighted shivering in the central railway-station of Messina.
