COTTON IRRIGATION IN THE SOUTHWEST (CLASSIC REPRINT) (PAPERBACK)DOWNLOAD

Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Cotton Irrigation in the Southwest The acreage of irrigated cotton in the United States has increased rapidly during recent years, and it is now irrigated in many areas where it was unthought of 30 years ago. In 1953 the United States irrigated a total of acres of cotton. Texas alone irrigated about acres of cotton in 1948, acres in 1953, and acres in 1955. Cotton is adapted to a wide range of soil conditions and produces well on both fine and coarse-textured soils. It is relatively tolerant to saline soil conditions that commonly occur on irrigated lands in the Southwest. Cotton is generally considered a warm climate crop and needs at least 190 rather warm, frost-free days to produce a high yield. However, good production has been attained under a variety of conditions ranging in elevation from below sea level in the Imperial Valley of California to feet in Arizona, and in climate from the arid regions of the Southwest to the subhumid areas of the Southeast.
