Excerpt from Essays: Old and New Among the various subjects selected by artists we are surprised that no one has ever made choice of the following scene, described by Eckermann in his Conversations with Goethe, which brings the two great poets, of whom we are about to speak, literally face to face. Goethe, says the narrator, was seated before a table on which burned two lights, which illuminated at once his own face and a colossal bust which stood before him on the table, and at which he was looking. Now, said Goethe, pointing at the bust, who is this? Apparently a poet, and an Italian, replied I. It is Dante, said he. It is well done; a fine head, and yet not very pleasing. He seems old, bowed down, and peevish; the features are lax and drawn down, as if he had just come from hell. I have a medal, struck during his life, and there everything appears much better. Goethe is then described as dilating on the grandeur of the face; on the life and works of Dante, of whom...
