Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Address Delivered at the Annual Commencement of Dickinson College, 1835 The spirit of inquiry, which has prevailed in reference to Education, has already elicited such copious information on the subject, that some may be disposed to regard any further discussion of it as useless. Were the productions of the pen and of speech designed only to instruct, there might be some ground for the opinion. Could we content ourselves to treat subjects of vital public importance like the mock discussions of the schools, in which the object is to see how much can be said upon a question, we might admit that if all has not been said on the subject of education that was possible, at least there has been enough for the formation of our opinions, and the direction of our practice. But who does not know that after the public mind has been fully enlightened upon a topic, there still remains the more difficult, and not less important, duty, of moving it to action. The thrilling appeals which so often emanate from the sacred desk, are called forth not so much by the ignorance, as by the apathy of the people. Week after week, we repair to the house of God, and hear from the same lips the same holy principles - principles which have perhaps been familiar to us from childhood; - yet we think not the service tedious or unnecessary, because we are conscious that as yet the appropriate effect upon our life and conduct has not been produced. It is for the same reason that we think that the subject of education cannot be too often presented for our...
