Brand New Book. Excerpt from Cost of Producing Pulpwood on Farm Woodlands of the Upper Connecticut River Valley The role Of the Association as banker undoubtedly sold the Cooperative to a considerable number of members. to have a broker acting in the interests of the producer appeared to be good economy, particularly as the margin formerly paid the commission man must largely carry the Association overhead. However, in order to fully justify and insure its continued existence, the Association must provide its members with worthwhile services not formerly available. This can be best attained by an educational program having as the ultimate goal a land management program involving the maximum sustained production of valuable timber crops on the holdings of all members. Surveys, inventories, and experimental work, together with market and other special studies, provide the basis for such a sound program of education. The educational program is carried on by the State Extension Service and the United States Forest Service, and includes individual advice to landowners in the form of woodland management plans meetings, discussions, and practical demonstrations. The work has the support of the Forest Products Association, Inc and is carried out in accordance with a Cooperative agreement between the New Hampshire State Extension Service and the Association. Although primarily concerned with the farmer, this program should develop in the consumer as well as the producer, a better understanding of problems of mutual interest. Primarily to determine the practicability of making partial cuttings in second growth stands, of Spruce and fir, a study of costs of producing pulpwood was undertaken by the Northeastern Forest Experiment Station in connection...
