Cruden Bay Books. Paperback. Condition: New. 184 pages. Dimensions: 10.0in. x 7.0in. x 0.4in. There are 18,000 golf courses, more or less in some form or other, in North America. This is where the story of the game is written. It is a sprawling tale but a select few have contributed so mightily to the golf narrative of the past 125 years that they belong in a Hall of Fame. It is on these courses that one finds not just the great champions, the great tournaments and the great architects but the story of senior golf. . . womens golf. . . televised golf. . . African American golf. . . retirement golf. . . miniature golf. . . collegiate golf. . . vacation golf. . . public golf. . . corporate golf. . . golf in the movies. . . nine-hole golf. . . Olympics golf. . . Since King Ludwig I of Bavaria introduced the concept of the Hall of Fame in the mid-19th century the herding together of immortals has become an American thing. There are an estimated 3,000 halls of fame for everything from hot dogs to pinball to mascots - but until now, not golf courses. Golf has had a stormy relationship with halls of fame. The first official pantheon of golf - for players mostly and a few architects and contributors - was created in Pinehurst in 1974 by a land development company. When the corporation imploded in the 1980s the Hall of Fame was left to languish for almost two decades until it was rescued by the PGA Tour and transplanted to its World Golf Village in St. Augustine, Florida. Golf courses have gotten their due from list-makers on the golfing merits of the course. You will not find the likes of...
