Regularly priced at $19.99. Manipulation is a deliberate effect on a person to make him/her behave in a certain way. As a rule, it leads to the occurrence of foreign, previously absent and unusual needs or desires in the victim, whereas real intentions of the master of puppets stay in the background. Why do people resort to manipulations? There may be a lot of answers to this question. For those unable to open communication, there is often no other way to reach the object of desires. The others are so afraid of failure in case of a direct request that they prefer every time to fetch about in order only not to discover their real concerns. And for still others, manipulations are so common that they always use this method, even if it is not needed. And so on. However, this is not the worst thing, but the fact that, manipulations surround us everywhere, not only in interpersonal relationships. Let s make things as clear as a bell! What kinds of manipulations exist? There are several classifications, but the most practical one is the classification based on the feelings or emotions, though, which the impact occurs. The science-based fact is that a person gets acquainted with on average of 4,000 people during a lifetime. This does not mean, however, that he or she knows well everyone, whom he/she has ever seen, worked or studied with, or just said hello. The question How to know what a person is?...
