The one was icy, the other hot--she knew not which. She laughed again--she did not seem able to help laughing to-night. You silly little thing! Yes, of course I am well, she answered gaily. Listen, theres the music--it has begun again--another valse, my favourite one--and Im engaged for everything. Come along, Aggie; you know I can never keep my feet quiet when I hear the tempting strains. As she spoke, she ran out into the hall, where there were knots and groups of people all ready to welcome and do obeisance to their hostess. How pretty she is! Approving murmurs rose on all sides as she passed, as she floated on, laughing and talking, and making her way towards the ball-room. Lucky dog, Delachaine! said one. Awfully excitable, I should say, came an answer. Most good-looking women are;...
