Not illustrated. 1867 Excerpt: .and clothes would have been all lost, and perhaps all my money, which was mostly in bills on France, and kept in my trunk. My first thought was about the beautiful picture, and I ran into the burning house and up the stairs, already on fire, to rescue a treasure that could never be replaced. You can rebuild a house, but a good painting once lost, is lost forever. Perhaps the artist himself, if again upon the scene, could never reproduce one like the original; because a painter works by inspiration, and that is a thing of the moment. It can not be recalled at pleasure. He may lay on color after color, but still it will be only colored canvas. 11 the spirit of the artist stirs him. he may make a picture, ever to be admired, with nothing but a crayon and scrap of paper. The people cried out in the wildest alarm as I went up the stairs, that I should lose my life, but I. paid no heed. The spirit of my craft moved me. There were several beautiful paintings in the same room, but my mind was upon one only--the-one that i had thought of, talked of and dreamed of, day after day. It was that one that I intended to save. It was the one, the ant hor of which I had so much desired to know. It was the one of which my friend had said, no money can...
