From Brougham Hall Campbell returned direct to London; but, after an absence of three months--the happiest three of his life --he confessed that it was no easy task to break off idle habits, and pull once more in harness. The friends and festivities of Scotland were still uppermost in his thoughts; and in a letter to Mrs. Ireland--the Mary Kenny of early days--he thus reverts to them: -Oct. 13th. . . The joy of my heart at meeting so many unchanged friends in Scotland has not yet subsided; and I need not say that, among the choicest of those friends, I reckon yourself and yours. How exquisitely went off your petits-soupers . . . I send you the enclosed letter, because I know it will please you, as containing honourable mention of one who is dear to you. You will...
