Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from His Father s Son: A Farce Comedy in One Act Smithkins (rus/u ng breat/zlessly into tlze room, s/zutting t/ze door wit/z a slam, and locking it). Thank Heaven I ve found a refuge at last! Phew! Maybe I didn t have to run for it! Oh, that ungrateful boy! TO think he could SO deceive a doting father! Haven t I confided to him my financial difficulties Haven t I talked it into him all his life that he was expected to retrieve the lost fortunes Of our noble house by marrying money? And now - when he had only to say the word and win the heiress to Old Huntley s thou sands - he has gone and actually engaged himself to a ballet-girl A flaunting, kicking, skipping, twisting, pirouet ting hussy Of a ballet-girl! (tragically) Fate fate! Have you any harder blow in store for me, if SO (t/zrowing open lzis coat and slapping lzis breast), strike now, for after this I can bear anything! Just to think how he has been fooling me all these months with his Yes, Papa (accent on t/ze last syllable) and no, Papa l The young rascal! But my eyes are opened at last. To-day I received this anonymous letter. (produces letter and reads aloud.) Watch your boy. I know on very good authority that he intends marry ing a certain Mlle. Rosa, a ballet dancer at the Criterion. Follow him when he leaves home to-day and you may see something that will open your eyes to the true character Of your only son and heir.
