Charles Darwin (1809-1882), English naturalist and writer, best known as the originator of the theory of biological evolution by natural selection. Nature Stories from Darwin is a 1912 compilation of true stories of animal behavior taken from among all of Darwin s various publications. In describing an observation of monkey behavior Darwin writes: A monkey was given lumps of sugar done up in paper. He lost no time in unwrapping the package and appropriating the contents. A practical joke was played on this monkey. A live wasp was put inside the paper with the sugar. In his haste to get at the contents the monkey was stung. After that experience Mr. Monkey grew cautious, and placed each wrapped package to his ear to detect the presence of any undesirable insect inside. In this way he avoided being the victim of the same joke twice. A nature story from Darwin has behind it the guarantee of absolute reliability. The stories which he used to illustrate his investigations, contain none of the element of unwarranted exaggeration employed by the nature fakirs.
