Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from The Green Caldron, Vol. 19: A Magazine of Freshman Writing; November, 1949 It was zero when we left Culver, and about ten below by the time we reached the Michigan line. The absence of glass in the side windows and the lack of a heater and of weather stripping on the doors made it a cold trip. We kept blankets over our legs and canned heat burning constantly in the door-less glove compartment to keep our hands warm. The only mechanical trouble on the trip arose from the poor workmanship of some well-meaning students in the Motors course, and was not of a very serious nature. The right front wheel had been set with a half inch too much toe-in, so that it rolled down the pavement at an angle rather than almost straight ahead as it should. If we left the tie rod as it was, we were almost certain to blow out the already thin tire. As we were miles from the next town when we discovered it, and going back was out of the question, I picked a grove of trees with a narrow lane and drove the car in for protection from the icy, night gale which was beginning to drive a fine snow from the northeast.
