Imagine the separation of death arisen between you and the too-familiar sharer of your home. What a flood of regrets you may thus detect, ready to brim and overflow your heart! The festal day recalled to mind That missed the gift that more endears; The word that might have been more kind, And now less fertile in vain tears: The little wrong, now greatly rued, That no repentance now can right. And it might be easier, one thinks, to be more gentle, more forbearing, more patient and generous, if that wide gulf of parting were oftener kept in mind and anticipated. Yet, after all, more love to God, more waiting and watching on Him, more self-denial and prayer, and diligent use of all the means...
