Ignorance; To, show that no argument. Can be drawn from analogy, as regards parturition among the lower animals, among savages, or among the healthy/and laborious classes of society, against the practical utility of obstetrics; that the abuses and malpractice of empirics or half-educated obstetricians cannot be urged against the judicious and scientific employment of those remedial measures and those well-adapted operations which, while they exalt our science, render it an inestimable blessing. You certainly will suitably appreciate the importance and dignity of obstetrics; you will be prepared to cultivate with assiduity its fundamental principles, to practise it successfully, to urge its importance on others, and to employ all your influence now, and more especially hereafter, to elevate this branch of the profession In the estimation of the community, and to extend far and wide its beneficial influence, that present and future generations may reap the benefits of your talents and studies, and be blessed through your instrumentality.
