Camel Press. Paperback. Condition: New. 290 pages. Dr. Alexandra Hadley would prefer to leave small town life behind forever, but her fathers death forces her hand. In his will, he has left her his medical practice and Georgian-style mansion, and it is up to her to hire a new doctor and settle his estate. Fresh out of medical school, Lexi is happily settled in Chicago, doing research in tandem with her boyfriend. Brian, fifteen years older with impressive credentials and sophisticated tastes, has no interest in visiting her birthplace of Glenmore, Illinois. Lexi soon discovers that home has its attractions, the first being the handsome contractor Joe Manning, her secret crush in high school. Seeing patients is also surprisingly satisfying. When Joe offers to remodel her fathers den, Lexi jumps at the chance to erase sad memories and become better acquainted with her gorgeous handyman. Even as the charms of Glenmore draw her in, a series of break-ins at her fathers house make her fear for her safety. Is the intruder searching for something other than valuables And how determined is the culprit Lexi finds her fragile happiness at risk, including her newfound love for Joe Manning.
