Excerpt from History of the Stars and Bars Be it said to the honor of both herein mentioned, the Veteran of the Gray, Orren Randolph Smith, designer of the first Confederate Flag, who died recently at his home in Henderson, North Carolina, and the Veteran of the Blue, General Edward Albert Lever, who fought against that flag, and who is the editor of the magazine in which this poem appears, whatever the convictions of the two men may have been, each knew the other for a generous foe. Significant of the fact is the silent tribute of regard which Latin America pays to the memory of a gallant soldier gone to his reward. The shadow of a storm brooded o er all, The hearts of men were thrilled with sounds afar, What is this gloom that blackens like a pall? If war must be, one cried, then give us war! Yet I have loved my country; I have cheered The Stars and Stripes beneath the Mexic skies; The bullet of the foe I have not feared! All men are brothers - must we...
