Excerpt: . . . had come and to invite him to the slowly greening woods where tanagers and towhees and the brown thrush were waiting. To this wonderful dooryard, just two blocks from where street-cars ran and bustle was made by people who were after things, there came a guest of rare quality. At twilight one night from within the cedars sounded the clear, vibrant note of a wood-thrush. It startled the neighborhood. All those who had ears heard the sweet Come to me, which the heavenly voice seemed repeating. Why do these voices call at evening and at early morning To one who thinks, the mystery of life and love A PERFECT EXPONENT OF CRUELTY--PITILESS, COOL AND UNRELENTING--IT WAS HARD TO BELIEVE THAT HE WAS NOT GRATIFYING SOME OTHER INSTINCT THAN SIMPLE HUNGER. and of all the worlds work is suggested by them. On the south side of the house there was an old poplar tree whose days were numbered. Nothing but the fact that a robins nest was in it had saved it for a year past. It was quite close to the window, and one day, as two sat at the window sewing, a queer, complaining strain of music, repeated over and over again, came from its depths. It went on all day with intervals of so short duration that the bird did not appear to have stopped for food. The next day the same querulous notes were uttered. Occasionally there was a faint resemblance...
