USE OF COMMERCIAL DVDS AS PHOTOELECTROCHEMICAL SENSORS

Condition: New. Publisher/Verlag: Edizioni Accademiche Italiane | Cu<sub>2</sub>O/TiO<sub>2</sub> nanostripes on a DVD as Photoelectrochemical Sensors | Cu<sub>2</sub>O nanoparticles have been grown by pulse-electrochemical deposition on a digital versatile disc (DVD) which acts as a nanostructured electrode. Prior to Cu<sub>2</sub>O deposition, the silver-coated rectangular-shaped grooves of the disassembled DVD were coated with a TiO<sub>2</sub> thin film by a modified sol-gel method. As demonstrated by atomic force microscopy (AFM) measurements, the DVD grooves are filled by a 120-130 nm thick TiO<sub>2</sub> film, while the thickness of the TiO<sub>2</sub> deposit on the crests is only ca. 50 nm. This inhomogeneous thickness leads to an inhomogeneous electric field when the DVD is used as electrode for depositing Cu<sub>2</sub>O nanoparticles, which eventually leads to the growth of Cu<sub>2</sub>O nanoparticles only on the DVD crests. A highly regular and reproducible Cu<sub>2</sub>O/TiO<sub>2</sub> stripe-like heterostructure is obtained where both semiconducting oxides are aside. This system has been characterized by scanning electron microscopy (SEM), X-ray photoemission spectroscopy (XPS), Raman and photocurrent measurements. A possible use of this easy&cheap electrode as a visible light responsive sensor to water soluble organics in basic solution is suggested. | Format: Paperback | Language/Sprache: english | 52 pp.
