Excerpt from The Latter-Day Saints Millennial Star, Vol. 76: July 16, 1914 The station was but an isolated telegraph-post; the station house comprised but one small room, a mile away from the nearest village. The reason for the maintenance of a telegraph-post at this point was found in the dangerous nature of the road in the vicinity, and the convenient establishment of a water-tank to supply the engines. The train for which we so expectantly and hopefully waited, was the Owl Express - a fast night-train connecting large cities. Its time-schedule permitted stops at but few, and these the most important, stations; but, as we knew, it had to stop at this out-of-the-way post to replenish the water supply of the locomotive. Long after midnight the train arrived in a terrific whirl of wind and snow. I lingered behind my companions as they hurriedly clambered aboard, for I was attracted by the engineer, who, during the brief stop, while his assistant was attending to the water replenishment, bustled about the engine, oiling some parts, adjusting others, and generally overhauling the panting...
