Not illustrated. 1915 Excerpt: . . . that the company has built many moderate priced homes, some of the bungalow type, renting for as little as 7. 00 per month, having most of the so-called modern conveniences, permitting them to be kept in perfectly sanitary and wholesome conditions, enforces self-respect through proper home life, and with self-respect comes a determination to attain other privileges and excellences. The New Jersey Zinc Company undertook its welfare work from a conviction that it would overcome the troubles which beset it and that it would ultimately prove a fine paying proposition. Results attained have confirmed its theory. There is no disposition to abandon any of the undertakings in connection with these sociological efforts. On the contrary there is a disposition to extend them and to make them farther reaching in their effects. The demonstration has produced a better, almost a model town; better, almost superior workmen, with promises of continued greater efficiency; and, more than all, there was given the consciousness of directing the plastic minds of the young in the community into channels which will lead them to better conditions in the future, preparing them for service here and ennobling their citizenship. What has been done at Palmerton can be done elsewhere in this great Commonwealth, and the example should be widely imitated by all well disposed employers. HERSHEY, A MARVELOUS EVOLUTION. No community in the State affords a better example of rapid industrial, material and social development, along lines of modern thought, exemplifying...
