In 1911 the New Zealand Rabbit was imported from the island for which they are named (See Origin) and immediately became popular and now (1917) appear to be third in point of numbers and rapidly gaining on the two leading varieties, viz., the Belgian Hare Rabbits and the different classifications of Giant Rabbits. The National Pet Stock Association (since renamed the National Fanciers and Breeders Association), with Chas. S. Gibson as secretary, has been the most important factor in making the rabbit a success as a commercial proposition in recent years and the industry is now almost as well established as is the breeding of poultry and other small stock; holding shows in nearly all the principal cities of the United States and a few in Canada. HOBBY--Rabbit keeping as a hobby is both pleasant and profitable. While not affording large profits, the business of raising rabbits in a small way may be made interesting as well as a reasonably remunerative adjunct to other pursuits.--United States Department of Agriculture, Farmers Bulletin 496. HOLES--(1) If large enough, in the hutches, will allow the rabbits to escape; (2) holes and cracks cause drafts--therefore snuffies. (See Snuffles.) (3) Rabbits will dig holes in the ground and also under the fences if given the opportunity. The latter can be prevented by carpeting or burying wire netting around the fence. (See Fence.) HONESTY--Scrupulous honesty in the retail business is a paying proposition--any other...
