Vocalization and articulation are among its most important functions, and worthy the thoughtful consideration of this body. Having had considerable personal experience in vocal culture, favorable and unfavorable, and also in the forming and adjusting of obturators for cleft palate, I have been led to study the subject more or less thoroughly, and I find my conclusions so radically different from the teachings of dental text-books, that I feel constrained to offer them for your consideration. The action of the soft palate has, perhaps, greater influence upon the tone of the voice than any other organ. I have consulted many treatises on both singing and speaking, and nearly every writer has, according to my observations, entirely misconceived the action of the velum. Drs. Flint and Lennox Brown are the more notable exceptions. It affords me satisfaction to observe that by...
