It can usually be readily stopped by rinsing the mouth out with ice-cold water, but in certain cases it requires that the cavity be plugged with some cotton wool which has been steeped in a solution of the perchloride of iron. After operations on the tongue haemorrhage may supervene, and, if excessive, a nurse should remember that she can always temporarily arrest it by hooking a couple of fingers round the base or stump of the tongue and drawing it forward against the lower jaw. In this manner the lingual artery is firmly compressed. Sometimes there is a good deal of oozing after excision of the tonsils, or removal of growths from the naso-pharynx. Gargling with icecold water is efficacious if the bleeding is troublesome. It is well to...
